VIDISHA ANALYTICAL

Date: 11-05-2022

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

This is to certify that Mr. Piyush Vishnu Bachhav, a student of Divine college of pharmacy, Satana, has undergone a One month training course From 09/04/2022 to 11/05/2022 in our Vidisha Analytical laboratory facility.

He has worked on a project title "RP-HPLC method development and validation for estimation of Linezolid in bulk drugs and dosage form".

During his tenure, we found Mr. Piyush Vishnu Bachhav, to be hard working, conscientious and a responsible person. The feed back of his participant has always been positive.

We wish her all the best of luck in future endeavor.

ABSTRACT

Immunomodulation is a therapeutic approach in which we attempt to intervene in the defense system's autoregulating processes, and immunomodulators modulate immune system activity, which reduces the inflammatory response. Immunomodulators are most commonly used in organ transplantation to prevent organ rejection and in autoimmune diseases such as rheumatoid arthritis. To speed up the response during active flares

ABSTRACT

Cancer is a disease characterized by the development of abnormal cells that divide uncontrollably and have the ability to infiltrate and destroy normal body tissue. Cancer has a high proclivity for spreading throughout the body. Cancer is the world's second biggest cause of death, but advances in cancer screening, therapy, and prevention are increasing survival rates for many types of cancer. There are four main types of cancer: Carcinomas, Sarcomas, Leukemia, and Lymphomas. Vitamins are the compounds that the body requires for appropriate growth and development. Several clinical trials have been carried out in recent years to establish the role of vitamins in the treatment or prevention of cancer. Because of their contentious role in cancer, taking vitamins for treatment or the prevalence of cancer is still prescribed. Vitamins have been shown in epidemiological research to have anticancer

ABSTRACT

Nanomaterials own particular features which cause them to mainly appealing for biosensing applications. Carbon nanotube (CNTs) based completely biosensors are diagnosed to be a next generation constructing block for ultrasensitive and ultra-fast biosensing systems. Especially, carbon nanotubes (CNTs) can withstand characteristic scaffolds for immobilization of biomolecules at their surface. Moreover, it holds various excellent, chemical, optical characteristics, electrical, and also the physical properties which make them one of the most magnificent, relevant materials for the transduction of signs related with the recognition that of metabolites and more important is

ABSTRACT

Flavonoids are one of the most important categories of small molecular secondary metabolites created in several elements of the plant. They show a good variety of medical specialty and helpful health effects for humans, which include, among others, antioxidative activity, radical scavenging capacity, coronary cardiovascular disease hindrance and antiatherosclerotic, hepatoprotective, antimicrobial, anti-inflammatory, and antitumor activities.

Received: 18 Dec 2023; Revised accepted: 06 Apr 2024

Abstract

The present study investigates the qualitative and quantitative analysis of the bioactive constituents mostly preservative of medicinally important selected plant. The quantitative method for ethanolic extract of Mentha Piperita (Extract 3A) was developed using spectroscopic methods such as UV spectroscopy, IR spectroscopy, GCMS, also chromatographic methods such as TLC, HPTLC. The present active phytoconstituents in Mentha piperita that possess antimicrobial and antifungal activity are Menthol and Pulegone. The modern tools like gas chromatography and mass spectroscopy are excellently work to analyses phytoconstituents from natural herb extract. Using this technique, it is very easy to achieve separation of both active constituent with full m/z range. In GC method the experiment was done on thermofischer instrument using chromeleon software. The column DB-1 (25m×0.32mm×1.0µm) was used as stationary phase and mobile phase was helium is used with optimized flow rate. In GCMS method Stationary phase was Rxi-5ms, Restek (30 m x 0.25 mm x 0.25 µm) and mobile phase was helium with 1.4ml/minute flow rate. The validation key parameters were also performed. After quantification by modern analytical tool the Extract 3A shows presence of active phytochemical in ratio of 1:10 equivalency with that of standard drug.

Key words: Quantitative analysis, Chromatography, Spectroscopy, Analysis of phytoconstituents, Hyphenated techniques, Herbal formulation

Natural active ingredients or phytoconstituents are extracted nowadays using modern sophisticated extraction methods. These active phytoconstituents possess medicinal importance and need to be incorporated in formulation in food and pharmaceutical industry. The potential and acceptance of these formulation are gaining importance over chemically synthesized drug formulation [1]. The active chemical constituent which are having antimicrobial and antioxidant properties are utilized in herbal formulation as preservatives. Thus, utilization most of commonly used natural spices like clove (Syzygium aromaticum), cinnamon (Cinnamomum zeylanicum Nees), black pepper (Piper nigrum L.), garlic (Allium sativum L.), have been added in formulation as preservatives [2]. Preliminary examination of extract often furnishes important information, which simplifies further course of analysis. Although these tests are not conclusive but sometimes, they give quite important clues for the presence of phytoconstituents meant for formulation [3]. Gas chromatography technique is cost effective while GCMS is the hyphenated technique with chromatographic and spectroscopic application gives accurate quantification of present active chemical constituents [4]. To attain separation with all other impurities can be done with gas chromatography, thus this technique also has application of qualitative analysis in herbal formulation industry [5-10].

Several commonly used natural spices like clove, cinnamon, black pepper, and garlic, known for their antimicrobial and antioxidant properties, are being added to formulations as preservatives. These natural additives offer potential benefits and are preferred over synthetic preservatives [11]. Preliminary examination of extracts provides valuable information for further analysis. While these tests may not be conclusive, they often offer important clues regarding the presence of phytoconstituents suitable for formulation [12]. Gas chromatography (GC) is a cost-effective technique used for separation, while gas chromatography-mass spectrometry (GC-MS) is a hyphenated technique combining chromatographic and spectroscopic applications, providing accurate quantification of active chemical constituents [13-15]. GC also finds application in qualitative analysis within the herbal formulation industry, aiding in separating active constituents from impurities [16-20]. Overall, these modern analytical techniques contribute to the development and quality assurance of natural formulations in the food and pharmaceutical sectors.

Abstract

Previously quantified extract of Mentha piperita species for active phytoconstituents menthol and pulegone has been evaluated for antibacterial and antifungal activity. For the research study activity on gram positive bacteria S. Aureus, gram negative bacteria E. Coli and fungal species C. albicans were studied. Qualitative and quantitative measurement of active constituents namely pulegone and menthol was previously done with modern analytical techniques. Quantified standards employed for quantification of main constituents in extract. The proposed research article is design to develop novel formulation without added synthetic preservatives. The quantified extract is prepared in series of concentration (10, 15, 20, 25, 30 ppm solution in ethanol). Each concentration is applied to different bacterial and fungal species in sterilized conditions. By the use of disc diffusion method and broth micro dilution method experiments were done. The Zone of Inhibition (mm) values of extract were found in linearity range. Notably, extract of Mentha piperita shows remarkable antimicrobial and antifungal activities against the tested clinical pathogens. The results indicate that these active constituents Pulegone and Menthol of extract can be used in formulation with replacement of synthetic added preservatives.

It is very important to do the research on medicinal herbs that have been used in traditional medicines as potential sources of new antioxidants and antimicrobials [1]. Traditionally, many plant oils such as essential oils and extracts have been used to report for possessing antimicrobial properties [2-3]. As well as, the improvement of interest in natural therapies and increased consumer demand for safe, effective and natural products mean that quantitative data on plant oils and their extraction are required [4].

Natural products like active ingredients isolated or separated from plants or herbal preparations with their potent medical use are a relevant group of substances for the food and pharmaceutical industry [5-7]. Nowadays, the modern drugs are also obtained from natural sources, and they are having much demand in market over chemically synthesized drugs. Therefore, drugs obtained from natural sources holding great potential to provide substances of pharmaceutical, food and cosmetic interest [8-10]. Herbal plant medicines emerged as containing highest antioxidant and antimicrobial products as preservatives [11-12]. Antioxidant and antimicrobials added to pharmaceutical formulations offer protection to other oxygen sensitive drug and from microbial growth for example Tulsi, Brahmi, Shatavari etc.

MATERIALS AND METHODS

Sources of test organisms for MIC

To evaluate antimicrobial and antifungal activity different species of bacteria and fungus were chosen like Staphylococcus aureus, Escherichia coli, Candida albicans for gram negative bacteria Macconkey agar used. Bacterial growth also checked using Mc-farland reader device for ideal count of microorganism. All material and apparatus used in method were previously sterilized with autoclave.

Preparation of different concentration samples

Ethanolic extract quantified using standard pulegone and menthol by HPTLC and GC method. Prepare series of concentration of extract in ethanol as follows:

Concentration (ppm)	Extract (mg)	Dilution	Volume (ml)	Diffusion (µl)
10000	100	Ethanol	10	2
15000	150	Ethanol	10	2
20000	200	Ethanol	10	2
25000	250	Ethanol	10	2
30000	300	Ethanol	10	2
